Internal Migration

CLIMATE change impact is the sword of Damocles hanging over humanity. The worsening impacts of climate change in three densely-populated regions of the world could see over 140-million people move within their countries' borders by 2050, creating a looming human crisis and threatening the development process, says a new World Bank Group report. However, with concerted action this worst-case scenario could be dramatically reduced, by as much as 80 per cent, or more than 100-million people. The report, 'Groundswell – Preparing for internal climate migration', is the first and most comprehensive study of its kind to focus on the nexus between slow-onset climate change impacts, internal migration patterns and, development in three developing regions of the world: Sub-Saharan Africa, South Asia, and Latin America. The study finds that unless urgent climate and development action is taken globally and nationally, these three regions together could be dealing with tens of millions of internal climate migrants by 2050. These are the people forced to move from increasingly nonviable areas of their countries due to growing problems like water scarcity, crop failure, sea-level rise and storm surges. These 'climate migrants' would be additional to the millions of people already moving within their countries for economic, social, political or other reasons, the report warns. World Bank CEO Kristalina Georgieva says, the new research provides a wake-up call to countries and development institutions. "We have a small window now, before the effects of climate change deepen, to prepare the ground for this new reality," says Ms Georgieva. "Steps cities take to cope with the upward trend of arrivals from rural areas and to improve opportunities for education, training and jobs will pay long-term dividends..." The research team, led by World Bank Lead Environmental Specialist Kanta Kumari Rigaud and including researchers and modelers from CIESIN Columbia University, CUNY Institute for Demographic Research, and the Potsdam Institute for Climate Impact Research applied a multidimensional modeling approach to estimate the potential scale of internal climate migration across the three regions. They looked at three potential climate change and development scenarios, comparing the most 'pessimistic', to 'climate friendly' and 'more inclusive development' scenarios in which climate and national development action increases in line with the challenge. Across each scenario, they applied demographic, socioeconomic and climate impact data at a 14-sq km grid-cell level to model likely shifts in population within countries. This approach identified major 'hotspots' of migration areas from which people are expected to move. "Without the right planning and support, people migrating from rural areas into cities could be facing new and even more dangerous risks," warns Ms Rigaud.

United Front Of Regional Parties

THE Bharatiya Janata Party's (BJP) coming to power in Tripura at the expense of 25 years of Communist rule has sparked a fresh bid for unity among India's regional parties to cobble up a United Front to take on the saffron party in fresh national elections due early next year.

The sweep and scale of BJP's victory in the state makes it as a standout event in the history of India's electoral politics for two main reasons: (1) for the first time it was a direct ideological battle between the political Right and the political Left; and (2) it saw total marginalisation of centrist Congress. The Left may have been voted out of power in Tripura but its vote share, which has plunged from about 52 per cent to 45 per cent in the recent poll, is not far from that of triumphant BJP.

True, BJP did benefit from the fall in the Left's vote share but only a little. At the heart of saffron party's surge in Tripura lies the windfall gain it made from huge erosion in the vote share of a moribund Congress party from 46 per cent to just about 2 per cent. As Congress party today is in power in just 4 of the total of 29 states and BJP has expanded to 21 states either on its own or in alliance, the assessment in the dominant regional parties opposed to BJP that Congress decline has contributed to BJP's ascendancy and will continue to do so.

It is in this backdrop that one has to see regional parties' calls for some kind of a joint front unity in the wake of the BJP's forming governments in three Northeastern states of Tripura, Meghalaya and Nagaland. The first call for unity came from regional satraps – K Chandrasekhar Rao of Telangana Rashtra Samithi (TRS) ruling the southern state of Telangana. The call was lapped up by Trinamool Congress (TMC) chief and West Bengal Chief Minister Mamata Banerjee.

A couple of days later, Bahujan Samaj Party (BSP) supremo Mayawati announced her party's support to candidates of Samajwadi Party (SP), her arch political rival in Uttar Pradesh, politically India's most crucial state because it sends the largest number of members to the Lok Sabha, in two parliamentary bypolls slated for March 11.

Adding to the churning is Congress leader Sonia Gandhi's invite to all opposition parties for a dinner meeting on March 13 in a fresh bid to put up a broad United Front against BJP in the 2019 parliamentary elections. Sonia's overture is going to be not just eating but a possible of meeting of minds and a show of strength of opposition parties against BJP.

If it was Chandrasekhar who first put forward the idea of a 'federal front' of regional parties, Mamata carried it forward by speaking to top leaders of Dravida Munnetra Kazhagam (DMK) in Tamil Nadu and BJP's oldest but now estranged ally Shiv Sena in Maharashtra. BSP put aside its over two-decade-old political hostility with SP to back the latter's candidates in the two bypolls.

Even though Mayawati has made it clear that her party's support to SP is limited to only the two bypolls and should not be taken as indicative of an alliance for the next national elections, the political circles here cannot stop recalling how in 1993 the two regional parties had joined hands to stop BJP's rise at the height of the Ram temple movement following the demolition of the Babri Masjid on December 6, 1992.

That 1993 alliance between BSP and SP to form a government in Uttar Pradesh after the assembly polls came unstuck in 1995 when SP activists in the state's capital city Lucknow allegedly assaulted Mayawati. This led to the breakdown of the formidable rainbow of backward caste coalition-built SP and BSP founders, respectively Mulayam Singh Yadav.

For 23 years until date, BSP and SP have remained each other's sworn political enemies vying for a slice of Muslim and backward-caste votes. Between them, BSP and SP have ruled Uttar Pradesh between 1993 and 2017 before BJP's spectacular win and return to power in the state.

It remains to be seen if BJP's winning streak in state elections across India since it won the national polls in May 2014 can spur the regional parties like TRS, TMC, DMK and Shiv Sena to join hands and if BSP and SP to forger their bitter past and revive their alliance in a bid for survival.

All these parties realise that BJP under the leadership of Modi and party President Amit Shah, has emerged as a winning force in election after election in states in the last four years. The only failures for the party have been in assembly polls in Bihar, where it lost out to a united opposition, and in Delhi. Today, BJP is in power in 21 of India's 29 states either on its own or in alliance with regional parties.

There is a feeling in the opposition camp that if they can replicate a Bihar-type mahagathbandhan (grand alliance) at the national level with the right caste and community combination, it can stop the BJP juggernaut in the next national polls.

As Congress party today is in power in just 4 of the total of 29 states and BJP has expanded to 21 states either on its own or in alliance, the assessment in the dominant regional parties opposed to BJP that Congress decline has contributed to BJP's ascendancy and will continue to do so

But the regional parties and Congress need to recognise that the realities of castes and communities in India have undergone important changes in the last two decades or so with the BJP itself emerging as a much more inclusive party incorporating backward Hindu castes moving beyond its traditional upper caste base of Brahmins and Banias.

As Modi persisted in weaving a grand narrative of politics of development promising jobs and digitalisation, BJP succeeded in blurring the caste fault lines and consolidate Hindu votes, especially among the young electorate, and chipping away at its rivals' hold on Muslim vote banks.

A countrywide front of regional parties for a non-Congress and non-BJP coalition governments in India needs to be anchored by at least one party with a pan-India presence, as had been the case in the past. Even then, their stability was short-lived.

The United Front government led by I K Gujral and H D Deve Gowda as Prime Ministers in 1996-97, which did not have in it either the two big national parties BJP and Congress, was propped from outside by Congress before the latter withdrew support leading to its collapse.

Congress and BJP underwrote the two stable ruling coalitions, which completed their tenures since 1999, as the lead parties. Besides, Congress is the main rival of regional parties like major regional and ruling groups like Telugu Desam Party in Andhra Pradesh, TRS in Telangana, SP and BSP in Uttar Pradesh, Biju Janata Dal in Odisha, TMC in West Bengal and the Left parties in Kerala, West Bengal and Tripura.

The move to bring regional parties under one umbrella may appear to be an exercise parallel to Sonia Gandhi's repeated calls for a broad opposition unity against BJP.

But the question is: are the two mutually exclusive? By calling the March 11 dinner meeting of opposition parties, Sonia maybe signalling to the regional parties and its potential allies in 2019 national elections that their interests do not run counter to each other.

The assessment in Congress is that BJP has reached its peak in the states ruled by it and may suffer the law of diminishing return syndrome there due to anti-incumbency. Secondly, Congress maybe eyeing to maximise its gains from a straight contest against BJP instead of multi-cornered battles, which will split the anti-BJP votes by joining hands with regional parties particularly in states in which these parties are a strong force. But winning elections in India today is less about getting the caste or community calculus right and more about constructing a credible narrative.

Thailand, WB to collaborate on promotion of digital eco

AAT News Service

THAILAND's Digital Economy Promotion Agency (DEPA) and the World Bank (WB) agreed to jointly undertake activities that will promote awareness of the Internet of Things (IoT) in Thailand and adopt digital transformation in public and private sectors.

The announcement was made during a seminar attended by more than 150 representatives from the Thai government, international organisations, businesses, NGOs and the media, to launch the recent WB report, 'IoT: The new government-to-business platform'.

"IoT plays a key role in our daily lives. Recognising the importance of IoT in creating digital innovation that will boost productivity and improve individual lives, the Thailand Ministry of Digital Economy and Society (MDES) has endeavoured to promote the development of the IoT in Thailand through various initiatives," said Pichet Durongkaveroj, Minister for MDES.

"The IoT is not just a hype. We view it as one of the most exciting pieces of technology of the decade, which will help catalyse digital transformation in public and private sectors in Thailand. Therefore, we need to raise awareness of IoT in all sectors by providing a networking forum so we all can meet and discuss opportunities offered by this technology as well as ways to allow IoT work for Thais," said Nuttapon Nimmanphatcharin, President and CEO, DEPA.

DEPA, an operating arm of the MDES, aims at promoting the development of digital industry and innovation as well as the adoption of digital technology in all sectors in Thailand. It is entrusted to establish the IoT institute, which will help create a healthy IoT ecosystem in the country. Through this seminar, the institute marks its first step in promoting the development and adoption of this exciting technology.

"It is a pleasure for the WB to partner with Thailand on making digital technologies and IoT work for the benefit of all," said Shabih A Mohib, the WB's Programme Leader for Equitable Growth, Finance & Institutions, in Thailand.

"IoT has significant potential, but it requires systematic, informed work by the government, private sector, and civil society. I hope this study will help examine the progress made in Thailand and encourage further thinking and discussions among policymakers and the private sector on the social and economic impacts of leveraging IoT applications," said Prasanna Lal Das, lead author of the report.

IoT refers to a digital system involving connected devices that gather data through sensors, transmit it over networks, and generate analytics; in some cases, adapting behaviour and responses based on local conditions. Examples of IoT are global positioning system (GPS) devices that track and provide real-time transit updates; sensors mounted on lampposts that measure and share pollution data; and smart thermostats, which adjust home temperatures based on people's routine, helping cut heating and cooling bills.

According to the report – the first to examine the progress made by governments incorporating IoT within their functions – many governments are eager to use IoT to better serve people, despite the obstacles of taking initiatives beyond the pilot stage. The business models to sustain IoT infrastructure could be developed further, and the policy landscape could be improved.

Policy recommendations include: Improving the knowledge and familiarity of most government agencies of IoT and its relevance to their immediate functions; translating 'hype to reality' and preparing 'toolkits' on how to implement initiatives that include IoT components; and disseminating 'lessons' from peers, as many agencies are keen to learn about initiatives in other countries, and what had worked or had not.

PFRDA relaxes norms for partial withdrawal under National Pension Scheme

AAT News Service

THE Pension Fund Regulatory and Development Authority (PFRDA) has relaxed the norms for partial withdrawal under the National Pension Scheme (NPS).

In accordance with the PFRDA (Exits and Withdrawals under the National Pension System) (First Amendment) Regulations 2017, the subscriber ought to be subscribed to the National Pension System, at least for a period of three years from the date of his or her joining to such system, to be eligible to make partial withdrawals, under specific circumstances as specified in such regulations.

The NPS subscribers can withdraw after three years from the date of joining the system and a maximum of three times during the entire tenure of subscription under NPS, but the partial withdrawal is linked with contributions made by the subscriber.

The subscriber shall be permitted to withdraw accumulations not exceeding 25 per cent of the contributions made by him or her and standing to his or her credit in his or her individual pension account, as on the date of application for withdrawal.

Earlier, the subscriber under NPS was permitted to withdraw accumulations not exceeding 25 per cent of the contributions made by him or her after 10 years from the date of his or her joining the system, and a maximum of three times during the entire tenure of subscription under NPS.

This was stated by Shiv Pratap Shukla, Minister of State for Finance in Rajya Sabha.

Demanding targets make corp staff sleep less than 4-6 hours

Sleep deprivation costs $150 billion a year in higher stress and reduced workplace productivity

AAT News Service

NEARLY 56 per cent of corporate employees sleep less than 6 hours in a day due to high stressed levels that arise out of tough targets set for themselves by employers and cause diseases like hypertension, diabetes etc, says an Assocham Healthcare Committee report.

Setting of unreasonable and unrealistic targets causes lack of sleep which has wide-ranging effects including day-time fatigue, physical discomfort, psychological stress, performance deterioration and low pain threshold and even increases absenteeism, says the report.

Releasing findings of the report, Assocham pointed out that sleep deprivation costs $150 billion a year in higher stress and reduced workplace productivity. The work performance pressure, peer pressure, difficult boss, all of this is taking a toll on physical and mental health of people.

As per the findings, about 46 per cent of the workforce in organisations in India suffers from some or the other form of stress. The stress could be related to personal issues, office politics, or performance target issues. There is a rising case of metabolic syndrome that includes diabetes, high uric acid, high blood pressure, obesity, and high cholesterol.

The findings further reveal that 46 per cent of respondents say that they feel fatigue on regular basis due to sleep disorders and close to 42 per cent of participants in the survey admit that they suffer from regular headache. Sleep disorders cause depression among 49 per cent respondents.

In terms of physical fitness, it is found out that 30 per cent corporate employees say that they hardly exercise against 25 per cent who physically exercise, but for less than 1 hour a week. About 24 per cent employees exercise for 1-3 hours a week and 9 per cent employees exercise for 3-6 hours a week. Merely 5 per cent stay fit by exercising for more than 6 hours a week.
